

RODNEY STEVENSON

University of Wisconsin-Madison

Professor Emeritus Rodney Stevenson has enjoyed a nearly 50-year career in the University of Wisconsin-Madison's School of Business and UW-Madison's Nelson Institute for Environmental Studies where he chaired the Energy Analysis and Policy graduate program. He is a founding member and current emeritus board member of the Wisconsin Public Utility Institute (WPUI), founded in UW-Madison's School of Business in 1982. He served as WPUI's director until 1998. Rodney received a Ph.D. in economics from Michigan State University and a B.A. in economics from Monmouth College (Illinois). His research interests have focused on regulatory economics and policy, institutional economics, and performance measurement.