

CATHERINE GILJOHANN

Alliant Energy

Catherine Giljohann is assistant vice president of regulatory affairs with Alliant Energy. She spent most of her career with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). In her various roles with FERC, she advised on commission orders and policy affecting major energy infrastructure, including natural gas pipelines and LNG facilities, oil pipelines, hydropower licensing and dam safety, and transmission siting. Her work regularly integrated environmental review and permitting requirements and involved close coordination with federal and state agencies, Congress, Tribes, landowners, environmental advocacy organizations, and industry stakeholders. Her federal experience also includes roles at the White House Council of Environmental Quality and the United States House Energy and Commerce Committee. Most recently, Catherine was general counsel for the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection (DATCP). Her portfolio focused on regulatory and administrative law and supported programs across agriculture, animal health, consumer protection, and food and recreational safety. Outside of work, Catherine has supported the Wisconsin Badger Honor Flight Program since 2010, serving as a guardian and tour guide for veterans spending the day in Washington, D.C. She continues her volunteer work with them now in Madison. Catherine earned her B.A. from the University of Wisconsin-Madison her J.D. from the University of Wisconsin Law School.
